Everett's planning department launches active land use projects interactive map

EVERETT, Wash. – The City of Everett's planning department launched a new interactive map to make it easier for the public to access information about active land use projects within the city of Everett.

The new interactive tool allows the public to launch the web map from either a desktop or mobile device. The map provides users with updated project information, links to project documents, as well as contact information for the staff person assigned to the project.

Until now, project information has been available online through eTrackit, which requires a project number to look up information. The new interactive map now allows users to easily locate projects, even without a project number.

Community members can access the map in the City's online map gallery and select active land use projects. To learn more, view the PDF guide about using the site.

People interested in being notified when new projects are added are encouraged to sign up for the Everett Planning-Public Notices newsflash. A report will be sent out every two weeks.
